

The Girl Who Could Read Hearts Wins Multiple Book Awards

Awarded Best 2016 Inspirational Fiction and Best Religious Fiction

Austin, Texas (PRWEB) February 01, 2017 -- "The Girl Who Could Read Hearts" written by Sherry Maysonave (<http://bit.ly/2kKZnx3>) has received four coveted 2016 book awards—The Pinnacle Book Achievement Award for best inspirational fiction, The Beverly Hills Book Award for best religious fiction, The Great Midwest Book Festival Award for spiritual fiction, and The London Book Festival Award for spiritual / religious fiction.

Targeted at adults to young-adults, this captivating novel weaves spiritual, mystical, and socio-political themes while exploring intuition, angels, and the afterlife. The story's multidimensional plot features a young girl, Kate Kindrick, who is gifted with a rare seventh sense—the ability to read human hearts coupled with keen intuition.

The book is mentally provocative and not based only on conjecture. Many of protagonist Kate's mystical incidents are based on the author's personal experiences. Sherry says she doesn't just believe there is an afterlife, she "knows there is."
